CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION

5.1   Conclusion

The results of this study are based on the UTAUT measurement model regarding the level of acceptance of the object of research, namely the QRIS payment system for undergraduate students of the faculty of business and economics at Atma Jaya University Yogyakarta. Based on tests conducted by researchers, the five proposed hypotheses are accepted. From these results, it can be concluded as follows:

1. The factor of performance expectancy has a positive effect on behavior intention. This means that students consider that by using QRIS, their payment transactions will be more efficient in terms of time taken to ease transactions (such as avoiding the lack of change).

2. The factor of effort expectancy positively affects behavior intention. This shows that students feel the minimum effort required when using QRIS, such as the ease of access that makes transactions more concise where students only need to scan the QR code provided by using the payment application on their smartphone.

3. Social influence has a positive effect on behavior intention. This shows that the surrounding environment is also one of the encouragements for students to use QRIS, such as friends and family of students who have started using QRIS and several shops or small businesses that have used QRIS.
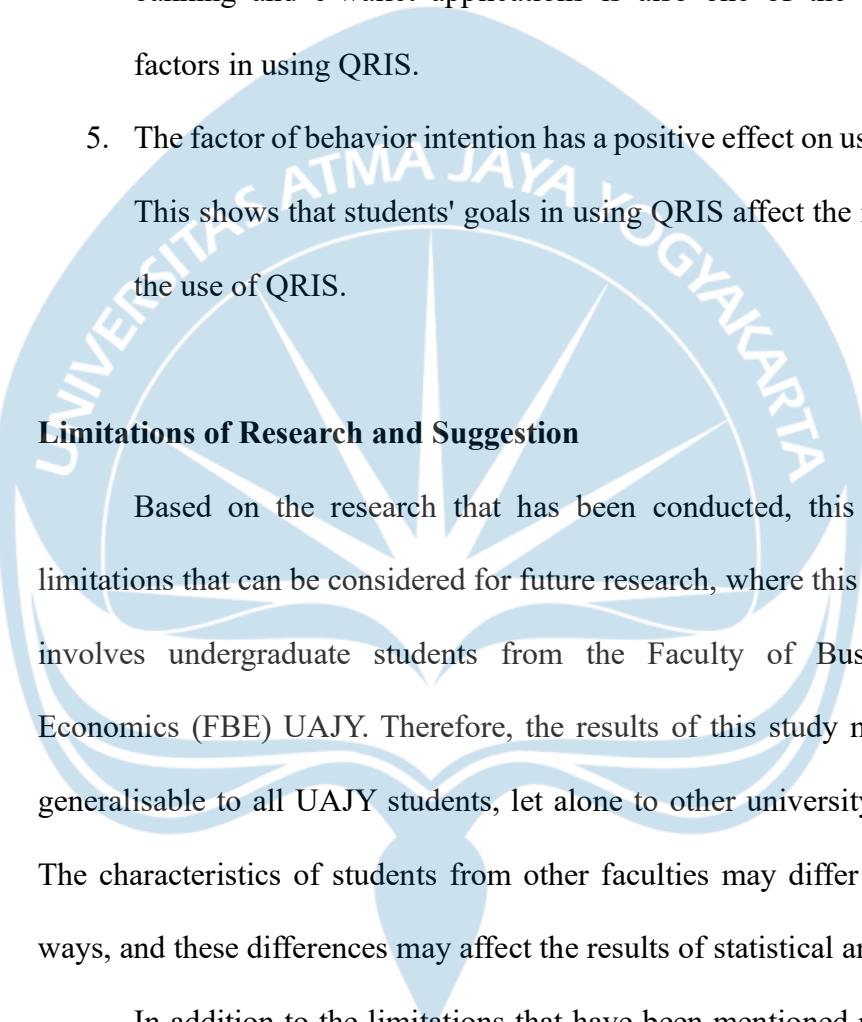

4. Factors from facilitating conditions have a positive effect on use behavior. Technological advances, such as internet networks and smartphones, are also one of the factors that cause students to use QRIS as a payment method. In addition, the development of mobile banking and e-wallet applications is also one of the supporting factors in using QRIS.

5. The factor of behavior intention has a positive effect on use behavior. This shows that students' goals in using QRIS affect the increase in the use of QRIS.

5.2   Limitations of Research and Suggestion

Based on the research that has been conducted, this study has limitations that can be considered for future research, where this study only involves undergraduate students from the Faculty of Business and Economics (FBE) UAJY. Therefore, the results of this study may not be generalisable to all UAJY students, let alone to other university students. The characteristics of students from other faculties may differ in several ways, and these differences may affect the results of statistical analyses.

In addition to the limitations that have been mentioned previously, the researcher also made the following suggestions:

1. Future research can consider including moderating variables in the UTAUT model so that it is possible to get another point of view on the acceptance of the QRIS payment method.

2. Future research can consider expanding the sample scope by involving students from various faculties or other universities to obtain more comprehensive and representative results. Thus, a broader and deeper understanding of QRIS acceptance among students can be achieved.
